

63rd ICoMST Student Awards

The ICoMST Student Awards take place annually at the International Congress of Meat Science and Technology (ICoMST) in recognition of scientific and technological excellence among those engaged in research into red meat.

Criteria

The awards will be granted to students who demonstrate scientific excellence by poster or oral presentations concerned with red meat at ICoMST 2017 in Cork, Ireland on the 13-18th of August, 2017. To be eligible for the awards, the presenter must not be older than 40 years of age on 31st December 2017. In addition, entrants must present evidence of valid and current student registration at the registration desk by the 14th of August, 2017. The student registration must not expire before 31st December 2017. The official language for Prize entries is English. Only one entry per person is allowed.

The Competition

The awards will be selected by a panel of internationally respected meat scientists and industry representatives at ICoMST in Cork, Ireland. The judges will put emphasis on the submission that has the most impact on either knowledge or application for the industry, or the furtherance of meat science and technology. The judging panel will be anonymous and may ask questions about the presentation throughout the Congress.

To Enter

Entries will be received up to the short paper submission deadline. Posters should include the statement: Student Award Contender. If registered for the IMS award too, the poster must also include statement: IMS Prize Contender. Those who qualify must indicate their interest on the ICoMST online short paper submission form and agree to submit a PDF of their poster by June 30, 2017.

Caveats

The panel of judges reserves the right not to award non-suitable submissions and alternative approaches may be sought to identify award winners.
